Earn Money in Economics Experiments

The Vienna Center for Experimental Economics is looking for participants to take part in experiments. Experiments are an important tool of academic research in economics. They help us to better understand the way the economy works.

A typical experiment takes about 2 hours and is held at our computerized laboratory in the center of Vienna. Participants earn money by making decisions. This can involve, for example, buying and selling a good in a market. How much you earn in an experiment depends, for example, on the prices at which you buy and sell.

No special knowledge of economics, mathematics, or computers is required to participate. However, a good command of English (or German) is necessary to understand instructions.

The Center organizes experiments on a regular basis. To participate in an experiment you first have to register. Registering means that you are in principle interested in participating but there is no obligation to take part in every experiment. We will just send you invitations for specific experiments and you can decide if you want to participate or not.
